

Coleman Cancer Center

(812)232-1418

The nonprofit Maple Center for Integrative Health partners with the Coleman Cancer Center Foundation at Providence Medical Center. This foundation funds free integrative health services provided to cancer patients and survivors of Dr. Sang Huh.

The Coleman Cancer Center directed by oncologist/hematologist Dr. Sang Huh, was established in 2005. The Center, named in honor of Terre Haute residents Kenneth and Norma, was created in part through the efforts of Lisa Coleman Paulsen and Lori Coleman Engle who lost their parents, Kenneth in 2005 and Norma in 2007, to cancer. “It was my father’s wish to bring the best treatments to cancer patients living in the Wabash Valley,” said Lisa Coleman Paulsen, president and chief executive officer of the Entertainment Industry Foundation, a Los Angeles-based charity. “We’re very happy to be able to make that dream a reality.”

“Our goal is to bring to the people of the Wabash Valley access to the newest and most innovative cancer treatment options available today.”

Coleman Cancer Center brings the newest and most innovative cancer care treatments to patients in our local communities. For more information about Coleman Cancer Center click here.

Debbie Stevens facilitates Smoking Cessation sessions that include the use of auriculotherapy-ear acupuncture to assist the release of tobacco addiction for Coleman Cancer Center clients. Deborah L. Stevens, ADS, CAC, LMHC

Deborah received her MA in educational psychology from California State University in Northridge, California in 1977 and has worked for over 30 years in the mental health and addictions field as a therapist.

Three years ago Deborah trained in New York to provide the auricular acupuncture for addictions and now belongs to NADA which is the national acupuncture detoxification association and NAADA which is a national organization for addictions.

For more information about Smoking Cessation sessions click here.